I. An Especially Pernicious Blockage (to perceiving and receiving the Lord's Immanuel presence): As we have discussed in our previous presentations, there are many things that can hinder perceiving the Lord's presence and/or receiving his help, and identifying and resolving these hindrances is one of the most important parts of Immanuel Interventions. In this presentation, I am going to discuss one specific example in much greater detail. This particular example is important because it is common, because it is very toxic, because it is very difficult to resolve without adequate understanding, and because it illustrates how common, simple, smaller phenomena can combine to cause especially pernicious blockages to perceiving and receiving Immanuel.

Five Common, Simple, Smaller Components:

A. First component – motivation: The first component of this particularly especially pernicious blockage is anything that motivates us to hide from the Lord, to push the Lord away, or to turn away from the Lord. For example, many of us have beliefs and emotions from traumatic memories that get transferred onto the Lord, such as “If He sees me like this, He will just humiliate me,” or “He’ll be angry at me and punish me for being bad,” or “He was supposed to take care of me, but He betrayed me.” If it feels true that the Lord will shame me or hurt me, it makes sense that I might want to hide from Him, and if I feel like the Lord has betrayed me, it makes sense that I might want to push Him away. Another common reason for pushing the Lord away, and also a common reason for turning away from the Lord, is being angry at Him for allowing the trauma (it's narcissistically mortifying, but many of us still occasionally do this one: “If that's the way You're gonna be, then I'm not gonna talk to You anymore!” (turned away, arms across chest, lower lip sticking out)). Another common reason for turning away from the Lord is refusal to accept the painful truth. In some situations, the Lord is inviting us to turn to Him for help, but His invitation includes a requirement that we accept the truth: “I'm here with you, and I can help you, but to receive my help you need to accept the painful truth – you need to turn away from your futile attempts to make the painful truth different, and then turn to Me.” If I am still refusing to accept the painful truth, and still focusing on my own solution of trying to make the truth different, then I will turn away from this invitation, and from the Lord who is making it.

B. Second component – choices/vows that directly block perceiving and/or receiving Immanuel: When we experience these thoughts and feelings, it is possible to choose to confess them and turn to the Lord for help; but unfortunately, we often respond with choices to hide from the Lord, push the Lord away, or turn away from the Lord. These choices/vows are the second component of this especially pernicious blockage, and our experience is that the Lord respects these free will choices, even though they prevent us from perceiving His presence and/or prevent us from receiving the help He has for us. If a person is working on a traumatic memory, and one or more of these choices are active, she won't be able to perceive the Lord's Immanuel presence, and/or won't be able to receive His Immanuel help because her own free will choices are in the way.

Third and fourth components – two “special ingredients”: The next two components are the ones I especially want you to remember from this presentation. I think of these two components as the “special ingredients” in the recipe for this especially pernicious Immanuel blockage.

C. “Anti-Immanuel” beliefs and emotions: The first “special ingredient” is any package of beliefs and emotions from traumatic memories that are transferred onto the Lord and that specifically and directly oppose Immanuel truth. I think of these as “anti-Immanuel” beliefs and emotions. Examples would include “He has abandoned me,” “He doesn't love me or want me, so He won't come,” “He will just disappoint me again,” and “He's not really good or safe – He says He loves me, but then He betrays me and hurts me.”¹

The reason these “anti Immanuel” beliefs and their associated emotions especially increase the hurtful power of the whole package is that they undermine any attempt to expose and remove the first two components. If a person is believing these memory anchored “anti Immanuel” thoughts, then she will not be holding onto the Immanuel truths in her normal belief memory system.² She will not be thinking: “I know the Lord is good, He is here with me, and He has help for me; but I can't perceive His presence, so there must be something in the way.” And she will not be praying: “Lord, please show me what's in the way – please show me the thoughts I'm misplacing onto You and the wrong choices I've made that are preventing me from perceiving Your presence and receiving Your help.”

D. “External locus of control” beliefs, emotions, and choices: The second “special ingredient” is often very subtle, but it is very common and very important. The most complete form of this second “special ingredient” is a particular package of beliefs, emotions, and choices that are developmentally appropriate for a very young child, but that become a sneaky, immobilizing trap when we bring them forward into our adult lives. When you are an infant or very young child, it is often true that pain you are experiencing is caused by somebody else's failure; and it is usually true that it is somebody else's responsibility to fix the problem, and that your only responsibility is to express your unhappiness and then wait for somebody else to do something. Furthermore, it is understandable and expected that *you will become increasingly distressed*³ if somebody does not fix the problem in a timely fashion.

Those of you familiar with Dr. E. James Wilder's material on stages of maturity will recognize that these are all appropriate beliefs, emotions, and behaviors for the *developmental stage of infant maturity.*⁴

¹ Note that these “anti-Immanuel” beliefs can overlap with and/or reinforce the beliefs and emotions from the first component.

² The “normal belief memory system” has not yet been defined, but it is so precisely the right term for what I want to say here that I am using it anyway. After reading the section below about the normal belief memory system, you can come back and read this section again, and it will make complete sense.

For example: if you are in pain because your Dad has not changed your wet diaper, it is your Dad's fault that your diaper has not been changed, it is your Dad's responsibility to fix the problem, it is appropriate for you to simply cry and wait for Him to change your diaper, and it is appropriate for you to get increasingly angry if your Dad ignores your crying and leaves you with a wet diaper. And since these beliefs, emotions, and choices were true and appropriate in the original early childhood experiences, the memories of these experiences will include the deep subjective conviction that these beliefs, emotions, and choices are reasonable and appropriate. When these memories are triggered forward, the person being triggered will also re-experience the original intense subjective conviction that these infant maturity beliefs, emotions, and choices are reasonable and appropriate.

When a situation in the present includes an interaction with the Lord that triggers these beliefs and emotions, with the Lord as their target, it will feel intensely subjectively true that it is the Lord's fault that you're in pain, that it is His responsibility to fix the problem, that it is reasonable for you to simply wait for Him to (finally) do His job, and that it is reasonable for you to become increasingly distressed if the problem is not solved in a timely fashion.

As with the first "special ingredient," the reason these external locus of control beliefs, emotions, and choices especially increase the hurtful power of the whole package is that they can undermine any attempt to expose and remove any of the other components. If a person is believing "it's the Lord's fault that I'm in pain, it's His responsibility to fix the problem, and it's reasonable for me to simply wait for Him to do His job (in fact, I'm outraged that you even suggest there's something I might need to do differently, and I'm angry that He has not already fixed the problem);" then she will not be really submitting to the possibility that there is something she needs to do differently. She will not be thinking: "I know the Lord is good, He is here with me, and He has help for me, but I can't perceive His presence, and these truths don't feel true. I must be making choices that are blocking me from perceiving Him, and these distorted, anti-Immanuel beliefs that do feel true must be coming from unresolved memories." She will not be praying: "Lord, please show me what's in the way – please show me any choices I am making that are preventing me from perceiving Your presence and receiving Your help, and please show me the source of these misplaced beliefs that I am transferring onto You."

There is also a partial version of the second "special ingredient" that comes from beliefs, emotions, and choices that are developmentally appropriate for an older child. When you are an older child, it is often true that the problem in front of you is too big for you. Even after doing everything you are able to do, you are still unable to resolve the problem. In these situations it is appropriate for you, as an older child, to take responsibility for asking "grownups" for help. However, it is the grownups' responsibility to figure out what kind of help you need, and it is the grownups' responsibility to give you this help in a way that you can maturity in Friesen, James G., Wilder, E. James, Bierling, Anne, M., Koepcke, Rick, and Poole, Maribeth. The Life Model: Living From the Heart Jesus Gave You. (Van Nuys, CA: Shepherd's House Publishing), 2000 revision, pages 15-35.

use. If there is something blocking you from being able to receive the help they are offering, it is the grownups' responsibility to identify and resolve these problems. As an older child, it is developmentally normal and appropriate to ask for help, but then to believe the next move belongs to the grownups, to feel dependent, and to wait for the grownups to figure out what kind of help you need and deliver it in a way that you can receive. And it is developmentally normal and appropriate for you to become increasingly distressed if the grownups do not provide usable help in a timely fashion. These are appropriate beliefs, emotions, and behaviors for the developmental stage of child maturity.

For example: When I had dyslexia and could not learn to read like the other kids in my class, it was my responsibility to tell the teacher that I needed more help. But it was the grownups' responsibility to figure out that simply repeating the usual methods over and over again was not working, it was the grownups' responsibility to figure out that I had dyslexia, and it was the grownups' responsibility to develop a customized teaching plan that took my disability into account. It was developmentally normal and appropriate for me to ask for help, but then to believe that the grownups needed to solve the problem, to feel dependent, and to wait for them to figure out what kind of help I needed and deliver it in a way that I could receive. It was developmentally normal and appropriate for me to expect the grownups to identify and resolve any problems preventing me from being able to use the help they were offering.⁵

And since these beliefs, emotions, and choices were true and appropriate in the original childhood experiences, the memories of these experiences will include the deep subjective conviction that these beliefs, emotions, and choices are reasonable and appropriate. When these memories are triggered forward, the person being triggered will also re-experience the original intense subjective conviction that these child maturity beliefs, emotions, and choices are reasonable and appropriate.

When a situation in the present includes an interaction with the Lord that triggers these beliefs and emotions, with the Lord as their target, it will feel intensely subjectively true that you have tried everything you know how to do, that this problem is too big for you, that you have asked for help, and that now it is the Lord's job to give you appropriate help (up to this point these beliefs are all true). However, it will also feel intensely subjectively true that if you are not getting help you can understand and use, it's because the Lord is not giving you the right kind of help, that it is the Lord's responsibility to identify and resolve any problems preventing you from being able to receive the help He is offering, that it is reasonable and appropriate for you to wait for the Lord to figure all of this out and do whatever is necessary to get you help you can use, and that it is reasonable for you to become increasingly distressed if the Lord does not solve the problem in a timely fashion.

Just as with the infant maturity external locus of control package, these older child external locus of control beliefs, emotions, and choices inherently block participating in the healing process, and inherently block owning responsibility now, in the present, as an adult, for whatever is in the way of perceiving the Lord's presence and receiving His help. As with the infant maturity external locus of control package, these child maturity external locus of control beliefs, emotions, and choices can undermine any attempt to expose and remove the other components. If a person is believing "I'm still stuck because the Lord is not giving me help that I can understand and receive, and it's reasonable and appropriate for me to wait for Him to figure it out and deal with any problems that are in the way;" then she will not be really submitting to the possibility that there is something she needs to do differently. She will not be thinking: "I know the Lord is good, He is here with me, and He has help for me, but I can't perceive His presence, and these truths don't feel true. I must be making choices that are blocking me from perceiving Him, and these distorted, anti-Immanuel beliefs that do feel true must be coming from unresolved memories." She will not be praying: "Lord, please show me what's in the way – please show me any choices I am making that are preventing me from perceiving Your presence and receiving Your help, and please show me the source of these misplaced beliefs that I am transferring onto You."

E. Optional final component – bitterness transferred onto the Lord: Bitterness transferred onto the Lord is an "optional" final component. In my experience, bitterness always adds an extra layer of "hardness" (hardness of the heart, that is). Bitterness always makes it more difficult to "get at" whatever other problems it has gotten attached to.

To summarize briefly, the five components that combine to create this especially pernicious blockage are:

1. Motivation to hide from the Lord, push the Lord away, or turn away from the Lord.
2. Free will choices to hide from the Lord, push the Lord away, or turn away from the Lord.
3. Anti-Immanuel beliefs and emotions (special ingredient #1).
4. External locus of control beliefs and emotions (special ingredient #2).
5. Bitterness transferred onto the Lord.

Those of you who have heard our teaching on implicit memory will especially understand the hurtful power of the implicit memory beliefs and emotions from the two special ingredients. Because of how the implicit memory systems work, when the implicit memory beliefs and emotions are triggered forward, and transferred onto the Lord, the person has no awareness or insight regarding "oh, these thoughts and emotions are from a traumatic childhood memory." Instead, it feels, subjectively true, that the thoughts and emotions are about the Lord, and that they are true in the present.

II. Truth carried in the "normal belief" memory system, and it's role in exposing and neutralizing this especially pernicious blockage:⁶

⁶ The discoveries and principles I discuss here regarding truth in the normal belief memory system are actually valid and helpful for dealing with many other emotional healing issues, but they are particularly

A. Multiple parallel memory systems: The more carefully we study the mind and brain, the more complexity we discover with respect to memory. *One of the most important developments in memory research has been the discovery of a number of parallel memory systems. These parallel memory systems are qualitatively different, and can operate independently.*⁷

There is a LOT of evidence demonstrating the reality of these different memory systems, and I will discuss this evidence in much more detail in the presentations I am developing on implicit memory. Some of the most easily understood data proving the existence of these parallel memory systems are observations from medical situations where a particular neurological injury affects the different memory systems in different ways. The most easily observed form of this kind of neurological case study are situations where a specific injury, such as a brain tumor, severely damages one of the memory systems, but does not damage other memory systems.

For example, Dr. Oliver Sacks describes a carefully documented case study of a young man with complete loss of ability to lay down new autobiographical⁸ memory due to a brain tumor that destroyed the hippocampus on both sides of his brain. Within minutes after the actual event, Greg would lose every trace of autobiographical memory for any personal experience – if you spoke with him for an hour, and then left briefly to use the restroom, when you returned five minutes later, he would have no conscious memory of ever having met you before.

However, his other memory systems were still intact. For example, he could learn new pieces of factual information – even though he did not have any conscious, autobiographical memories of his conversations with Dr. Sacks, he could remember the facts of news trivia from these conversations. Cases of differential memory damage as dramatic as this are almost hard to believe unless you see them for yourself. If you asked him: “Greg, have you spoken with Dr. Sacks today?” He would respond with something along the lines of “Who’s Dr. Sacks? I’ve never met the man.” But if you then asked him: “Who won the baseball game last night?” He could often respond with accurate sports trivia from his conversation with Dr. Sacks earlier that morning: “The Mets won, 7 to 5, with two runs in the ninth inning.”

He could learn to find his way around the hospital – even though he did not have any valuable and needed when dealing with especially difficult problems, such as the “especially pernicious blockages” just described.

⁸ Autobiographical memory is memory for the story of your life. For example, if I asked you “what did you do this morning?” you would access your autobiographical memory and tell me a story about this morning’s events. For example: “I got up at 6:30 because we had to get the kids ready for church, and they also had to be prepared to be at the babysitters afterwards, since we were planning to come to this presentation. Then we had our usual pancake breakfast – that’s a Sunday morning tradition at our house – and Bobby spilled his milk all over...etc.” Your memory for this story of your morning adventures is autobiographical memory. Remembering the meaning of the word “autobiography” helps me to remember the definition of autobiographical memory: If I wrote a book about the story of my life, it would be called an autobiography; similarly, memory for the story of my life is autobiographical memory.

conscious, autobiographical memories of his years of living at the hospital, he could walk from his room to the cafeteria without getting lost. If you asked him: “Greg, can you show me the way to the cafeteria?” He would respond with something along the lines of “I’ve never seen this place before this morning! How could I know the way to the cafeteria?” But when it was time for lunch, he would get up and walk to the cafeteria.

He could learn to type or play the guitar – even though he did not have any conscious, autobiographical memories of his many practice sessions, if you put him in front of a typewriter, he could type, and if you gave him a guitar, he could play.

He could learn new songs – even though he did not have any conscious, autobiographical memories of ever hearing the new songs before, if someone started humming the tune, he could sing the rest of the song.

And he could form new emotional associations – even though he did not have any conscious, autobiographical memories of previous interactions with people on the staff, his face would light up when he met those who had been especially kind to him.⁹

The most dramatic demonstration of the difference between his severely damaged conscious autobiographical memory and his “other” memory functions was his experience with attending a rock concert. Dr. Sacks took him to a Grateful Dead concert – a band he loved, but that he had not heard for many years. Rock concerts are not particularly subtle – not something you would forget easily. This concert was an all day event, and Greg participated enthusiastically and passionately. The next day, he had no conscious, autobiographical memory of going to the concert – the morning after the concert, when Dr. Sacks asked him about the Grateful Dead, he reported that he really liked the group, but that it had been many years since he had been to one of their concerts. But he could remember and sing the songs from the concert, and he had new positive emotional associations. For example, if Dr. Sacks played one of the new songs from the concert, Greg would immediately begin to sing along – accurately remembering both the words and the melody; and after the concert, whenever Dr. Sacks came to visit Greg’s face would light up and he would greet Dr. Sacks as a fellow Grateful Dead fan.¹⁰

Another especially dramatic case study is presented by Dr. Claparede. Dr. Claparede describes a 47 year old woman who had neurological injury that, like Greg’s brain tumor, destroyed her ability to form new explicit autobiographical memory. Like Greg, she would lose all conscious, autobiographical memory of personal experiences in a matter of minutes. Her inability to record new autobiographical memory was so severe that she still did not recognize her surroundings, even after living at the chronic care facility for five years. She did not recognize the doctors she saw every day, and continued to greet her nurse as a complete stranger, even after this nurse had been with her for six months.

However, the memory system for establishing new beliefs remained intact, as demonstrated by a famous experiment performed by Dr. Claparede. While shaking hands with the patient, Dr. Claparede stuck her with a pin hidden between his fingers. Several minutes later, when Dr. Claparede again reached out for her hand, she pulled it back, and refused to shake his hand. When questioned about her behavior, she persisted in her refusal to shake his hand, but appeared to have no conscious memory or insight regarding the recent incident with the pin. Any normal person would have responded to his questions with something direct and obvious, such as “Why do you think I don’t want to shake your hand? You just stuck me with a pin! (You Jerk!)” Instead, this patient seemed confused, and had difficulty explaining her persistent refusal to shake his hand. Eventually she commented “Is there perhaps a pin hidden in your hand?” When asked why she would have this fear, she again had difficulty explaining herself, and eventually responded with comments such as ‘That was an idea that went through my mind,’ or ‘Sometimes pins are hidden in people’s hands.’ She believed that it was not safe to shake Dr. Claparede’s hand, and she held this belief with enough conviction that she refused to shake his hand, even in the face of awkwardness and embarrassment, but she had no conscious autobiographical memory of getting stuck by the pin only minutes before.¹¹

The point with respect to multiple memory systems is this: The patient still had the memory system necessary to form new beliefs, even though she had completely lost the memory system necessary to establish new explicit autobiographical memories.

B. “Normal” beliefs vs trauma-associated beliefs: Elsewhere in our teaching material, we have talked about implicit memory and explicit memory as an important example of multiple memory systems. Now I want to talk about a different way in which multiple memory systems are important. I would like to propose a specific hypothesis regarding multiple memory systems and beliefs. My proposed hypothesis is that beliefs associated with unresolved traumatic memories are qualitatively different from what I call “normal beliefs,” and that these two different kinds of beliefs are actually carried in two, different brain-mind memory systems. I am in the process of developing a separate lecture discussing this hypothesis in much greater detail. However, for the purposes of this presentation, I would like to simply present it as a working hypothesis, and summarize my arguments for its validity as follows: these two different types of beliefs behave very differently, and the differences between them are consistent with being carried in two different brain-mind memory systems.¹²

One of the most important differences between “normal beliefs” and beliefs that are associated with unresolved traumatic memories is the ease with which mistaken or distorted information can be corrected. “Normal beliefs” are easily modified, and simply require the presentation of new information to be able to correct errors. Beliefs associated with unresolved trauma, on the other hand, are much more difficult to modify, and errors can not be corrected by simply challenging them with new information.

Note: the lecture presented on the DVD includes animated slides that many have found to ¹¹ Claparede, Edouard. “Recognition and ‘me-ness.’” In D. Rapaport (Ed.), Organization and pathology of thought (New York, NY: Columbia University Press), 1951, pages 58-74, specific quotes pages 69-70 (translated from Claparede, E. “Recognition et moiite.” Archives de Psychologie, 1911, Vol. 11, pages 79-90).

¹² Although the details of their hypotheses are not exactly the same as what I am proposing here, other authors have also proposed that unresolved traumatic memories (including the distorted beliefs associated with them), are carried in neurological circuits different than the memory systems for “normal” autobiographical memory (and the truths, understanding, and beliefs associated with these “normal” memories). See, for example, Shapiro, Francine. Eye Movement Desensitization and Reprocessing: Basic Principles, Protocols, and Procedures. (New York, NY: Guilford Press) 1995, pages 40-41, and Van der Kolk, Bessel A, McFarlane, Alexander C, Weisaeth, Lars, Editors. Traumatic Stress: The Effects of Overwhelming Experience on Mind, Body, and Society. (New York: Guilford Press) 1996, page 282.

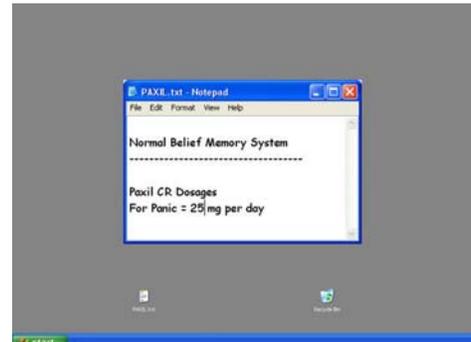

be especially helpful in understanding the analogy discussed below. We have included several frames from two of the animated slides sets, and slide prompts from our presentation to indicate where other animated sets have been omitted, but we recommend the DVD for optimal presentation of this material.

An analogy that has been helpful for us is to think about files and windows on your personal computer. SLIDE 19.0 When you open a file in the normal belief memory system, and then present new information to correct an error, it's as if you can easily work in the same window, and use the new information to modify the original file. Whenever this file is opened in the future, it will contain the new, updated, correct information. SLIDE 20.1 However, in most situations, SLIDE 20.2 when you open a file in the trauma-associated belief memory system, it will open in "read only" status. SLIDE 20.3 You can present new information by creating new files in new windows, SLIDE 20.4 but you can't work in the same window to permanently correct the error in the original file. SLIDE 20.5 The new information can compete with the distorted belief associated with unresolved trauma, and this will moderate/manage the distorted beliefs and associated emotions, but the original file will not be permanently corrected. In the future, SLIDE 20.6 every time the file from the trauma-associated belief memory system is activated, SLIDE 20.7 the distorted beliefs and associated emotions will still be there, and you will have to repeat the process of trying to moderate/manage the problem by opening other, separate files that carry truth that challenges the distorted beliefs.

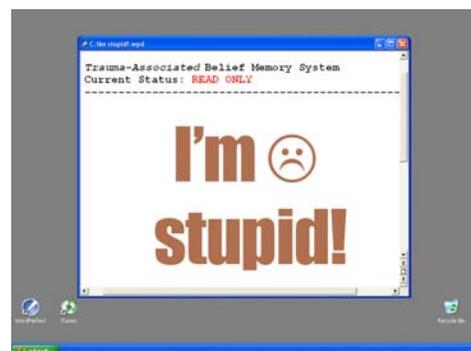

For example, information about medication dosages is mostly carried in my normal belief memory system. If I believe that 12.5mg/day is the appropriate dosage of Paxil CR (controlled release) for the treatment of panic disorder, but then I come across a new, carefully documented study that shows 25mg/day is actually more effective for most patients, the new information will permanently modify my original beliefs about Paxil dosages. In the future, when questions about Paxil dosages for panic disorder come up, the new, correct information will come forward. There won't need to be a fight, every time the question comes up, between a persistent erroneous file and the newer, more accurate information.

In contrast to information about Paxil dosages carried in my "normal belief" memory system, I had distorted beliefs about my intelligence that were associated with unresolved traumatic memories of having undiagnosed dyslexia while I was trying to learn to read. My "beliefs associated with unresolved trauma" files contained the belief that I was stupid. Even though other evidence accumulated that challenged this belief, this opposing evidence was carried in separate files in my "normal belief" memory system. This opposing evidence could challenge and compete with my distorted beliefs, but it was never able to get into the “beliefs associated with unresolved trauma” files in order to permanently correct my “I’m stupid” beliefs. In spite of all the evidence to the contrary, every time my dyslexia trauma would get activated by some trigger, my “I’m stupid” beliefs associated with unresolved trauma files would come forward, and it would feel true that I’m stupid.

C. True beliefs vs pseudo-beliefs: Before moving on with the rest of the presentation, I would like to take a moment to distinguish between true beliefs, and what I call “pseudo-beliefs.” A true belief contains content that you really do think and feel is true – content that you actually believe. It is important to note that true beliefs may or may not be accurate. For example, at one point in history, scientists truly believed that the sun orbited around the earth, even though this belief was erroneous. Whether or not a true belief is accurate, it will feel true whenever its file is open and its window is forward.¹³

A pseudo belief contains content that you want to believe/feel you need to believe/think you ought to believe, and that you try to believe, but that you don’t actually believe. In your heart of hearts, you are not convinced that it’s actually true and it never feels true – in your heart of hearts, you don’t actually believe it. Pseudo-beliefs can be mistaken for true beliefs when the person perceives an intense need for the pseudo-beliefs to be true, and significant amounts of denial and self deception are involved. In these situations, our emotions will reveal what we truly believe. For example, if I truly believe that I am competent and that my job is secure, I will feel calm and secure. However, if I truly believe that I am incompetent, and at risk of losing my job, and “I am competent and my job is secure” is actually only a psychological defense pseudo-belief, I will tell myself “I am competent and my job is secure,” but I will feel anxious and insecure.

If the phenomena of pseudo-beliefs is not recognized, it can cause a lot of confusion as we study normal beliefs and beliefs associated with unresolved trauma.

D. Conditions for correcting distortions in the trauma-associated belief memory system: You may have noticed that I said “in most situations” when I was describing the frustrating persistence of erroneous beliefs associated with unresolved trauma. The good news is that beliefs associated with unresolved trauma can be permanently corrected under certain conditions. Any time you meet these necessary conditions, you can access and correct erroneous beliefs carried in the trauma-associated belief memory system. Any time a therapy session or emotional healing ministry session produces permanent resolution of trauma-associated beliefs, it is because these necessary conditions have been met. For example, this is exactly what happens when Theophostic-based therapy or ministry is successful, and this is exactly what happens when Eye Movement Desensitization and Reprocessing (EMDR) is successful.

¹³ Note that “true beliefs” can be present in both the normal belief memory system and in the trauma-associated belief memory system, and this is because my definition of a “true belief” is that you truly believe it – not that it is necessarily accurate/true. In fact, the reason that distorted beliefs associated with unresolved trauma cause so much trouble is that we do truly believe them. If we didn’t truly believe them, they wouldn’t have any power to cause trouble.

This all leads to a very practical and very important bottom line: If you want to design a therapy or ministry intervention that consistently provides permanent resolution for distorted, trauma-associated beliefs,¹⁴ then you need to figure out, and intentionally set up, the conditions necessary for opening, and making corrections in, the memory system that carries trauma-associated beliefs.

Neither Dr. Shapiro, the developer of EMDR, nor Dr. Smith, the developer of Theophostic, formulated the question in exactly this way, but this is essentially what they both try to do in the material they teach regarding practical tools and techniques. Of all the approaches to psychotherapy and/or emotional healing ministry (that I am aware of), Dr. Smith's Theophostic approach does the best job of identifying, and systematically setting up, the necessary conditions for permanently resolving distorted beliefs associated with unresolved trauma. And this is why, predictably, theophostic-based therapy or ministry is the most effective approach for accomplishing this specific goal.

At this point, some of you in the audience may be asking: "so what are the necessary conditions for permanently correcting distorted trauma-associated beliefs?" We could obviously take an entire seminar to answer this question in detail, and the specific necessary conditions are actually not directly relevant for the purposes of this presentation. However, since there are probably some of you who will be distracted by lack of closure if I leave this question completely unanswered, here is a very short summary of my current formulation of the necessary conditions for opening the trauma associated belief memory system, and for correcting distorted beliefs carried in this system:

Conditions necessary for accessing and correcting distorted beliefs carried in the trauma-associated belief memory system:

1.) The traumatic memories must be activated to the point that the trauma-associated belief memory system is "open." My perception is that this happens when the traumatic memories are triggered to the point that the trauma-associated beliefs feel true. My perception is that this will necessarily involve activation of the negative emotions associated with the distorted beliefs. That is, being connected to, or feeling, the negative emotions associated with the distorted beliefs indicates that the trauma-associated belief memory system is active and "open;" and being disconnected from, or not feeling, the negative emotions associated with the distorted beliefs indicates that the trauma-associated belief memory system is not active or open.

¹⁴ Note that resolving trauma-associated lies is an important part of establishing optimal emotional health, but this should not be the only focus of therapy and ministry. For example: helping the person connect with Jesus is even more important than resolving trauma-associated lies, and other important objectives include helping the person increase his capacity, helping the person address areas of immaturity, helping the person do remedial work in areas where they are missing important life skills, and helping the person develop appropriate sources of joy.

2.) The person must be accepting, facing, and acknowledging the truth about what happened in the traumatic memory, as opposed to fighting it, running away from it, or denying it. The memory of being separated from my parents at two years old, which I will describe in the case study included later in this presentation, provides a good example. Until the recent breakthrough, I had always been stuck at the point of trying to make it different – when I was triggered, and inside the thoughts and emotions from the memory, I was still fighting the truth of what had actually happened. In order to get healed, I had to release my attempt to make it different, and accept the truth of the painful history that had already occurred: “Mom and Dad didn’t come back for a long, long time, it was overwhelming, there was nothing I could do about it,...etc.”¹⁵ In some way, it felt like continuing to fight to make the past different was focusing and facing in the wrong direction, and this “facing in the wrong direction” hindered me from being able to receive truth into my trauma-associated belief memory system.

3.) The person needs to be facing and acknowledging the erroneous trauma-associated beliefs, as opposed to fighting them, running away from them, or denying them. Note here that I am not saying the person needs to accept that the erroneous trauma-associated beliefs are true (because they aren’t). I am saying that the person needs to face and acknowledge “when I am triggered, and blended with the thoughts and emotions from the inside of this memory, it feels true that _____ (fill in the distorted trauma-associated beliefs).” And furthermore, the person needs to let himself connect to the implicit memory package from the traumatic event, so that from the inside of the memory, he can say “Lord Jesus, it feels true that _____ (fill in the distorted trauma-associated beliefs). Please help me to know Your truth in this place.”

4.) The person needs to be facing, acknowledging, and “standing straight” in the painful emotions associated with the erroneous trauma-associated beliefs,¹⁶ as opposed to fighting them, running away from them, or denying them. Many things can get in the way of facing, acknowledging, and standing straight in the painful emotions, and these hindrances must be resolved in order for this necessary condition to be fulfilled. For example, we have often seen people who have made choices/vows along the lines of “I will never feel the pain from this memory.” We worked with one woman who had spent many emotional healing sessions trying to resolve the distorted beliefs associated with a specific traumatic memory, but she would never report or display any emotions as she would talk about the painful event. Eventually, we discovered that at the time of the trauma, she had made a choice/vow that she would never again feel the pain from this event. Within seconds of resolving this vow, she began sobbing intensely, reported that she was finally feeling the emotions from the traumatic memory, and then proceeded to permanently resolve the distorted beliefs associated with the traumatic memory.

5.) Accurate information needs to be available, so that when all of the other conditions are met, the person has appropriate truth with which to replace the distorted, erroneous beliefs. Jesus is the most powerful and effective source of replacement truth, but other sources of truth, such as truth already carried in the normal belief memory system, can also be effective. Experiential truth is more powerful than cognitive/logical truth, but cognitive/logical truth can also be effective.

6.) The person must be willing to allow/accept correction of the distorted trauma-associated beliefs (guardian lies, vows, and willful sin opposing correction must be resolved). For example, the person might have traumatic memories where she was betrayed by important men in her life, and have associated distorted beliefs that no men can be trusted. With these unresolved traumatic memories and associated beliefs, she may also have a guardian lie, such as “I will get hurt if I ever trust a man again;” and this guardian lie could lead her to vow “I will never trust men,” which could also be formulated as “I will never believe that men are trustworthy.” This vow is a free will choice that will obviously block her from being able to receive the truth that some men are trustworthy, and this guardian lie and vow will have to be resolved before she is able to allow correction of her trauma-associated beliefs about all men being unworthy of trust.

7.) Any other “hindrances” need to be removed (other psychological defenses hindering the process, demonic interference, others?). For example, the person must resolve any ways in which dissociation, or any other psychological defenses, are hindering him from being adequately connected to the material being processed, so that the trauma-associated belief files are adequately “open.”

*Again, when these conditions have been met, the truth goes into the memory system that carries the distorted, erroneous trauma associated beliefs, and is able to permanently modify the original memory files, so that the original belief error is replaced with truth.

E. The role of truth carried in the normal belief memory system:¹⁷ For a number of reasons, that I won’t take time to describe here, I think it is easy for those of us who have been immersed in Dr. Smith’s Theophostic teaching to underestimate the value of truth in the normal belief memory system. Therefore, I think these comments about the role of normal belief memory system truth are especially important for those of us who have been immersed in Theophostic.

So what is the value, or function, or role of truth carried in the normal belief memory system?

#1.) Can be the source of the truth that replaces the erroneous, distorted beliefs associated with unresolved trauma: The truth that replaces the erroneous beliefs associated with unresolved trauma can sometimes come from the person’s own non-traumatic memory files. This transfer of truth from non-traumatic memories to traumatic memories can only happen when the necessary conditions are in place; but when these conditions are met, non-traumatic memories are actually often the source of truth that permanently replaces erroneous, distorted beliefs associated with unresolved trauma.

My own healing journey has provided many examples of this phenomena. In some sessions I have perceived replacement truth coming directly from Jesus; however, in other sessions, it seemed like truth from non-traumatic memory files simply transferred across to the traumatic memories carrying the distorted beliefs in question. As all the conditions for opening and modifying the trauma-associated belief system were met, I could feel myself, from the inside of the unresolved traumatic memory, become aware of truth in my own mind (in my non-traumatic memory files) that I suddenly realized was true. At that moment, my subjective experience was that, even from the inside of the triggered, activated traumatic memory package, the distorted, erroneous belief no longer felt true. It felt, subjectively, like the erroneous, distorted belief from the inside of the traumatic memory was simply replaced with the truth carried in my non-traumatic memory files.

Before receiving healing, whenever I had been inside the triggered place, I was aware of the truth in my non-traumatic memory files, but it had always seemed far away, without power, and did not feel true. I could remember that it was there, and I was aware of its presence, but somehow I couldn't access it so that it felt true, or had power to displace the distorted, triggered beliefs. At the moment of healing it felt like the usual barrier between the traumatic and non-traumatic memories went down, and I was suddenly able to access the non-traumatic memory truth in a new way, so that it could come into the traumatic memory in a way that felt true and had power to permanently correct the distorted beliefs.¹⁸

My hypothesis is that this is the usual mechanism for the “healing moments” in psychotherapy sessions where EMDR is successful; and I think this is also the usual mechanism for the “healing moments” in those Theophostic-based sessions where distorted trauma-associated beliefs are permanently resolved but the person does not have any subjective experience of perceiving the Lord's presence or action.

Note that truth carried in non-traumatic memories is especially important for those who have lots of blockages in the way of connecting with Jesus more directly because non-traumatic memories will then be the primary source of replacement truth. That is, those who have difficulty perceiving and connecting with Jesus will need to rely more heavily on truth carried in their own non-traumatic memory files. The more truth you have in your non-traumatic memories, the better off you will be!

#2.), #3.), and #4.) Helps to expose the true nature of the problem, helps the person choose to cooperate with the Lord's healing work, and helps the person choose righteous behavior: A second important role of truth carried in non-traumatic memories is to help expose wrong choices and unresolved traumatic content, including distorted interpretations and the associated distorted left-sided emotions. A third important role of truth carried in the normal belief memory system is to help the person choose to cooperate with the Lord's healing work. And a fourth important role of truth carried in the normal belief memory system is to help the person choose righteous behavior, even when unresolved traumatic content is triggered forward and feels true.

¹⁸ Note that my description of this kind of “healing moment,” that seems to occur when there is finally an effective connection between the traumatic memory carrying the distorted belief and the non-traumatic memory carrying the relevant truth, is very consistent with Dr. Shapiro's “disparate neuro networks” hypothesis. See, for example, the following quote from Shapiro, Francine. Eye Movement Desensitization and Reprocessing: Basic Principles, Protocols, and Procedures. (New York, NY: Guilford Press) 1995, pages 40 & 41: “...Although combat veterans, sexual molestation victims, and rape victims may know intellectually that they are not to blame for what happened to them, they often continue to struggle with the negative cognitions and disturbing affect. Again, this conflict appears to be due to the fact that the disparate information is stored in separate neuro networks. The Accelerated Information Processing model suggests that the moment of insight and integration comes when the two neuro networks link up with each other....” (parentheses mine)

My experience is that when we are triggered, the toxic content associated with the triggered traumatic memories is activated but we are still also aware of the truth carried in our non-traumatic memory files. There is always a battle between the unresolved traumatic content and the truth in our non-traumatic memories, and one or the other is more or less dominant, depending on the strength of the normal belief memory system truths, the intensity of the current triggers, the intensity of the traumatic memories, and the extent to which the traumatic content includes unfinished processing tasks that impair our ability to function at levels 3, 4, and 5.¹⁹ If the truth carried in our non-traumatic memories is sufficiently compelling, the truth will expose the erroneous beliefs, the associated inappropriate emotions, and the wrong choices that contribute to the pernicious blockage described above. If the truth carried in our non-traumatic memories is sufficiently compelling, then when we are in the furnace of really difficult situations, when triggered beliefs feel true and the associated triggered emotions are intense, the normal belief memory system truth can help us choose to cooperate with the Lord's healing work. And if the truth carried in our non-traumatic memories is sufficiently compelling, then when we are in the furnace of really difficult situations, when triggered traumatic content is intense and feels true in the present, then the truth in our non-traumatic memories can help us choose righteous behavior.²⁰

For example, when a person is suffering from the pernicious blockage described above, if she has sufficient Immanuel truth in her non-traumatic memory files she can counter the enemies schemes with: "Even though _____ (the distorted beliefs described above) feel true, I know, from the Immanuel truth carried in my normal belief memory system, that the Lord is good, and that He is here with me. Since these Immanuel truths don't feel true, there must be something in the way." And recognizing "there must be something in the way" is the first step in exposing the beliefs, emotions, and choices of the pernicious blockage. If the Immanuel truth in a person's non-traumatic memories are sufficiently compelling, when it comes into conflict with the erroneous trauma associated beliefs and emotions, instead of being overwhelmed by the triggered beliefs and emotions the normal belief memory system truth will expose the triggered beliefs and emotions for what they really are.

If the truth in her non-traumatic memory files is sufficiently compelling, and especially if the person understands implicit memory and recognizes the triggered beliefs and emotions for what they are, the person can choose to cooperate with the Lord's healing work, even when she is in the furnace of being intensely triggered. Even though "God has abandoned me," "He won't come," and "It's His fault and His responsibility to fix it" all feel true, the person can still choose to submit these distorted trauma associated beliefs to the Immanuel truth carried in her non-traumatic memories, and then choose to pray "Lord, please show me what's in the way. Show me what I need to do differently – show me any misplaced beliefs that I am transferring onto You, and any choices I am making that are preventing me from perceiving Your presence and receiving Your help." As the Lord then reveals the blocking choices, the person can revoke these choices. As the Lord reveals the memories carrying the

²⁰ My perception is that truth carried in non-traumatic memories is a resource that can augment our maturity skills and help us to complete the unfinished processing tasks carried in the traumatic memories. Along these lines, note that recognizing the triggered material for what it really is (even in the middle of being triggered), choosing to cooperate with the Lord (even in the middle of being triggered), and choosing righteous behavior (even in the middle of being triggered) are all examples of "acting like our true selves."

beliefs and emotions that have been misplaced onto Him, the person can invite the Lord to bring truth to permanently replace the distorted beliefs and resolve the associated distorted emotions.²¹

If the truth carried in my non-traumatic memory files is sufficiently compelling, I can choose righteous behavior, even when I am in the furnace of being intensely triggered. When I am triggered, and I do not have enough non-traumatic memory truth to challenge the triggered beliefs and emotions, then I make choices that are hurtful to myself and others and I feel entitled to them. I feel entitled to them, defend them, and justify them, instead of asking for help to chose to act differently. However, truth carried in non-traumatic memories can help me choose constructive behavior and avoid toxic behavior. If I have non-traumatic memory truth that is sufficiently compelling, I can choose constructive behavior even when I am triggered.

My experience with getting triggered to my two year old separation memories provides a good example. Before I understood triggering, implicit memory, or the specific components of this pernicious blockage, when my two year old separation memories would get triggered, I would become intensely blended with my child implicit memory thoughts and emotions, and have no insight regarding what was really happening. It would feel true, in the present, that the Lord wasn't with me when I needed Him, that He wouldn't come even though I was calling and calling, that I couldn't trust His heart for me,...etc. Furthermore, my two year old implicit memories included the small child "external locus of control" component, so it would also feel reasonable that I should be allowed to signal my distress by simply being increasingly unpleasant, and it would feel reasonable that it was Charlotte's responsibility to figure out what was wrong, and her responsibility to do whatever was necessary to fix it. So instead of asking for her help, and appreciating anything she was able to give me, I would simply become increasingly unpleasant, and then judge her and point more unpleasantness in her direction if she didn't do whatever was necessary to make me feel better.

And I felt entitled to my triggered thoughts and emotions, and to my inappropriate, hurtful behavior, and would defend them. I had no insight regarding how my anti-Immanuel thoughts and emotions were actually implicit memory content coming from childhood wounds that had been triggered forward, and I had no understanding regarding how my hurtful, entitled, external locus of control behavior was also coming from my two year old implicit memory package. My triggered thoughts and emotions felt true in the present, and my inappropriate, hurtful behavior towards Charlotte felt reasonable. It felt reasonable and appropriate to point my negative emotions and unpleasant behavior at Charlotte until she did ²¹ In one way or another, I always ask the Lord to bring truth to replace the distorted beliefs associated with the unresolved traumatic memories. For example, I might ask "Lord, what do You want me to know about this? or, "Lord, is _____ (fill in the distorted belief) true?" or I might pray "Lord, please show me Your truth here." After I ask the Lord for help, it seems that sometimes truth from my normal belief memory system simply transfers across, without any subjective perception of the Lord's presence. In these cases, since I have asked Him to bring truth, I believe in faith that He is facilitating the normal brain-mind process of truth transferring from my normal belief memory system to my trauma-associated belief memory system. In other situations, I can perceive the Lord's presence in some way, and it is clear that He is facilitating the process of truth transferring from my normal belief system to my trauma-associated belief system. For example, I will perceive His presence in some way, and it will feel like He is pointing out to me the truths in my normal belief memory system that He wants me to notice. In still other situations, I can subjectively perceive His presence in some way, and He directly brings new truth that has never occurred to me before.

whatever was necessary to fix the problem.

I did not have truth in my non-traumatic memory files that could adequately challenge my triggered, erroneous beliefs and emotions, or my hurtful, inappropriate behavior choices.

However, this has been steadily changing over the past several years as I have been learning about triggering, about implicit memories, and about the specific components of this pernicious blockage. Now, when lingering splinters from my two year old separation memory get triggered,²²I still experience anti-Immanuel beliefs and emotions, and small child external locus of control thoughts and emotions, but now I usually quickly recognize these triggered implicit memory contents for what they are. Instead of arguing with Charlotte about why my anti-Immanuel beliefs and emotions are true in the present, and pointing my external locus of control stuff at her, I usually quickly acknowledge both of these pieces as triggered implicit memory contents and ask her for help in working with the Lord to find and resolve the remaining splinters.

Before, my triggered thoughts and emotions, my hurtful and inappropriate behavior, and my lack of insight would usually trigger and alienate my number one ally. Instead of getting help in exposing and resolving my pernicious blockage, I would get a miserable experience of back and forth escalating triggering. Now, when I quickly recognize the triggered implicit memory content for what it is, acknowledge to Charlotte that I am triggered, and ask her for help in an appropriate fashion, I am much more likely to get assistance.

It is important to note that I make these constructive choices while I am still triggered, while the triggered beliefs and emotions still feel true, and while the entitled, hurtful behavior still feels reasonable. Furthermore, while I am making these new, constructive choices, I am acutely aware of the new truth carried in my non-traumatic memory files, and I can feel it helping – it feels, subjectively, like holding onto this truth in my non-traumatic memories helps me to make these new, constructive choices.

In addition to increasing the likelihood of getting help from those around us, and thereby indirectly helping to expose and resolve “especially pernicious blockages,” this “helps choose righteous behavior” feature of truth in our non-traumatic memory files also decreases hurtful behavior associated with any other distorted, trauma-associated beliefs and emotions. To put it another way: this “helps choose righteous behavior” feature of truth in our non-traumatic memories helps decrease hurtful behavior associated with any triggered, distorted, trauma-associated beliefs and emotions.

To summarize regarding points 2, 3, and 4: Having clear, strong, non-traumatic memory truth regarding implicit memory phenomena and regarding these specific pernicious blockage components helps us recognize these things in ourselves. And having this clear, strong non-traumatic memory truth also helps us choose “out” of their influence by helping us own our triggered beliefs and emotions, by helping us revoke our wrong choices, and by helping us turn to the Lord and to others for help.

#5.) Increases the efficiency and effectiveness of emotional healing work: My experience is that truth carried in our non-traumatic memory files can dramatically increase the efficiency and the effectiveness of emotional healing work. For example, knowing about the necessary conditions for opening and permanently modifying traumatic memory files allows us to intentionally and systematically establish these conditions in emotional healing sessions. When we accurately identify these necessary conditions, and systematically establish them, then the success rate for permanently correcting distorted beliefs associated with unresolved trauma goes way up. None of this will work if the person receiving ministry does not choose to cooperate with the Lord's healing work, but once the person does choose to cooperate, applying these principles from truth carried in our non-traumatic memory files dramatically increases the efficiency and effectiveness.

Using specific tools and dealing with specific hindrances provide additional examples. I ask the people I work with to do a lot of homework reading, because then when we are in actual sessions we can simply refer to information that is already present in their non-traumatic memory files instead of taking time to present the information as new material. For example, the technique of reporting everything that comes into your mind during a session is very important, but people often have difficulty with it. If the person receiving ministry has studied our material regarding the compelling reasons for applying this tool, then, when we are in a session and I notice that she seems to be analyzing and editing before reporting, I can simply remind her of the material she has already studied instead of taking time in the session to discuss the reasons for submitting to this important discipline.

A session I facilitated several weeks ago provides a good example of the value of truth carried in non-traumatic memories when working with specific hindrances. We were coming to the end of the time available for the session but the person was still in a very painful, unresolved place. At this point, I realized that a combination guardian lie/vow was hindering him from being able to perceive the Lord's presence. Since he was already familiar with these concepts, all I had to do was name the guardian lie and vow, and say that I thought they were in the way. He was able to quickly and efficiently cooperate with resolving the guardian lie and vow, and then was able to perceive the Lord's presence and receive powerful healing in the last minutes of the session. The necessary information was already present in his non-traumatic memory files, so that he could simply plug this package of material in at the appropriate spot in the session and keep moving forward. If he had not already been familiar with these concepts, we would have had to stop to discuss them, we would have run out of time half way through my explanations, and he would have left the session still unable to perceive the Lord's presence and still miserably tangled in his triggered thoughts and emotions.

#6.) Provides reference points for our error-trapping "safety nets":

Information in our non-traumatic memory files provides the reference points for both the left sided and right sided error trapping "safety nets" that protect us from unintentional error and/or malicious deception.

The more I study psychological and neurological research about the mind and brain, the more I appreciate how the Lord has carefully designed the right and left sides of the brain to work together in an elegant and complimentary fashion. Not only do they work together to solve problems and develop new ideas, but they also provide complementary error trapping "safety nets" that help protect us from being misled by unintentional error and/or malicious deception.

For example, the left sided system provides an error trapping “safety net” based on language, linear thought, and logical analysis:

“Yes, I realize that you have an intuitive hunch this should work, and that you have a subjective sense that this idea is from the Holy Spirit, but is it consistent with scripture? Is it consistent with firmly established scientific data and principles? And if you do try it, make sure to include follow-up that carefully evaluates the ‘fruit.’”

There have been many situations where careful logical thought has helped to distinguish between intuitive brainstorming that were brilliant, and intuitive “brainstorms” that turned out to be very bad ideas. And there have been many situations where logical analysis has helped to distinguish between true guidance from the Holy Spirit and triggered thoughts and emotions that had been mistaken for guidance from the Holy Spirit.²³

On the other hand, the right-sided system provides a non-logical, intuitive error trapping safety net:

“Yes, I know it sounds good, and seems to make sense, but it just doesn’t feel right. I especially have a sense of uneasiness about their conclusions regarding _____ (fill in the blank). I’m going to go over the whole thing again and see if I can figure out what’s bothering me.”

There have been many situations where a subjective, intuitive sense of caution has helped catch an important error/deception that had slipped past the left sided logical analysis.

And the raw material that both error trapping, safety net systems use is the information carried in our non-traumatic memories – the pieces of information that we believe to be true are the reference points that both systems use as they search for error and/or deception.²⁴ This is another reason why it is so important to have good teaching that puts accurate information into our non-traumatic memory files.

#7.) Supplies the truth that we use to run our “normal” lives: A quiet, but HUGE, function of truth in our non traumatic memories is to govern our “normal” lives – truths in our non-traumatic memory files are the beliefs that feel true, and that guide our thoughts, emotions, and choices whenever we are not triggered.

Now that we have discussed these various functions of truth carried in our non-traumatic memories, I want to emphasize again a very important point: putting truth into our non-traumatic memory files – even powerful, faith-building truth from the experiential end of the spectrum, such as witnessing the Lord heal others – can not, by itself, resolve the erroneous beliefs that are carried as part of unresolved traumatic memories. Trying to directly resolve trauma-associated lies by putting truth into non-traumatic memory files is a fruitless and endless endeavor. Truth in non-traumatic memories can be a part of permanent healing, in all the ways just described, but you cannot directly correct lies carried in traumatic memories by putting truth into non-traumatic memories.

F. A widespread and expensive false dichotomy: In case this point is not already sufficiently clear, I want to explicitly expose and challenge what I perceive to be a widespread and expensive false dichotomy. In logic, a dichotomy is a situation where we face two mutually exclusive choices, and must choose one or the other. A false dichotomy is when we think we are facing mutually exclusive alternatives, and must choose one or the other, but this is not actually true.

My perception is that we need to recognize the value and role of truth in the normal belief memory system, AND we need to recognize and work with distorted beliefs that are associated with unresolved trauma. Recognizing the importance of the normal belief memory system and recognizing the importance of the trauma-associated belief memory system are not “either/or” options. We do not have to choose one or the other. My perception is that many in the church somehow get into a false dichotomy with respect to these two different memory systems. Some Christians perceive the importance and value of truth in the normal belief memory system, and do a good job of studying, teaching, and preaching to provide this truth; but these people often fail to recognize the reality or importance of the trauma-associated belief memory system, and think that the only problem with those who have distorted beliefs is that they don’t yet have enough truth in their normal belief memory systems. Other Christians recognize the reality of distorted beliefs associated with unresolved trauma, and recognize the importance of working with the trauma-associated belief memory system to resolve these beliefs; but these people often devalue truth in the normal belief memory system, and come to the mistaken conclusion that working with the trauma-associated belief system is the only important work. These approaches that choose one or the other have been misled by false dichotomy thinking. Again: I think we need to recognize the importance and role of truth in the normal belief memory system, AND we need to recognize the reality of beliefs that are associated with unresolved trauma, and recognize the importance of working with the trauma-associated belief memory system in order to resolve these distorted beliefs. I propose that we recognize and learn about both of these memory systems, so that we can include each of them in the appropriate places, and work with them in ways that are complimentary. The role of truth in the normal belief memory system in exposing and neutralizing especially pernicious blockages, as presented in this discussion, is an excellent example of recognizing and working with both of these memory systems in a way that is complimentary.

III. A “case study” example from my own healing journey: My own healing journey provides an excellent example of the pernicious blockage recipe I have just described, and also provides an example of how truths in our normal belief memory systems can help in exposing and neutralizing pernicious blockages.

A. New Immanuel truths in my normal belief memory system: An important part of my healing journey during the past 18 months has been receiving Immanuel truth into my normal belief memory system.

Some of this Immanuel truth came from Charlotte’s message. As I was hearing Charlotte’s thoughts and insights, and working with her to refine her presentation, I found the content of her message speaking powerfully to my own heart; I felt like I received important truth for my own life when she shared this message with our church; and I felt like I received important truth each time I listened to the tape.

Some of this Immanuel truth came from what I observed as I facilitated Theophostic®-based therapy sessions. Over and over again, people receiving healing would suddenly become able to perceive the Lord's presence, with them, in the traumatic memories, and then report something along the lines of: "Jesus is here, with me, in the middle of _____ (fill in the horrible memory). I can see now that He was with me when it happened, and that He's always been with me, even in this memory," or something along the lines of: "Jesus is going through my whole life, and showing me how He's been with me in all the memories where I was hurt...." And as we describe in more detail elsewhere in this Immanuel series, perceiving the Lord's presence, with them, in the traumatic memories, was often an important part of the healing process.

And some of this Immanuel truth came from very specific words the Lord spoke to a number of our clients in the context of emotional healing sessions. In the fall of 2004, as Charlotte and I were working together to develop the material for her Immanuel message, I facilitated a number of Theophostic®-based therapy sessions in which the Lord spoke what I felt was an "Immanuel" message, to both the clients and to myself. Each of these people were working on particularly horrible memories, and with persistent Immanuel Interventions they were all eventually able to perceive the Lord's living presence with them, in the memories. At some point in their subsequent interactions with the Lord, each of these people asked Him: "Lord, why did You allow this to happen to me?"

And in each of these situations, His response was something along the lines of: "Your limited, human mind is not able to understand why the Father and I chose to allow _____ [fill in the corresponding evil/trauma/tragedy], but I am here with you, and because of who I am, that is enough."

In my experience, when somebody asks "Why did God allow my grandfather to rape me?" or "Why did God allow both my parents to die in a car wreck when I was only three years old," no answer I can give seems to do much good. I can say "We're not able to understand God's plan, but He loves you and He's with you," but my words seem to wither and stumble as they confront the magnitude of the person's pain.

In marked contrast, each of the people in the ministry sessions I was just describing perceived that they were hearing these words from Jesus, they felt the words were true, and these words carried so much emotional and spiritual authority that they accepted them as an adequate answer to their questions. When these people reported this Immanuel truth from the Lord, I could immediately see the effect it had on them, and I could also feel it's emotional and spiritual authority. These words carried a living, kairos truth for me as well, and I could feel them resonating powerfully in my heart.

As I was meditating on this truth from Charlotte's teaching, on this truth from observing the Lord's work in therapy sessions, and especially meditating on the specific "Immanuel" message from the Lord, all of this material condensed into a core of potent normal belief memory system truth for me:

One: "God is good, and I can trust His heart for me, but my finite mind is not big enough to understand some of His choices. 'I am with you' is the Lord's answer to many of our hardest questions (such as 'why did You allow this to happen to me?')."

Two: "The Lord is always with me, and because of who He is, that is enough."

Three: “This is the truth. If it doesn’t feel like the truth, now, or in any memory I’m working in, then there’s something in the way.”

I began to apply these Immanuel truths in my own life. I found myself often thinking about this material as I was working with clients – it strengthened my faith in the Lord’s presence and goodness, and encouraged me to be more persistent in rooting out the hindrances that were preventing people from perceiving and receiving the Lord’s Immanuel presence. I found myself focusing on this material in my personal devotional time. And I also found myself thinking about these truths at strategic moments in my own healing work.

Particularly relevant for this presentation is that these Immanuel truths proved to be very important in helping me expose and neutralize my particular version of the pernicious blockage I described earlier.

B. My pernicious blockage: As Charlotte mentioned in her message, the whole situation with our car was INTENSELY triggering for me. It stirred up a number of different childhood memories, and especially triggered thoughts and emotions from the extended separation from my parents that happened when I was two years old. Mom had Mononucleosis during her pregnancy with my younger sister. Between the pregnancy and the mono, she was so ill that Dad had to carry her across the hallway to the bathroom, and so ill that my brother and I were sent to stay with friends in another city for three weeks because Mom was too sick to care for us. To put this in perspective: a two-year-old will experience a three week separation from his parents in much the same way as he’ll experience his parents dying suddenly – they disappear suddenly, and stay away longer than any possible two-year-old ability to understand or cope with their absence. Furthermore, a two year old perceives his parents to be omnipotent – he believes nothing happens unless they allow it, and that nothing could make them do anything they don’t want to do. This means he will believe he is separated from his parents because they want to be away from him, and he will believe that they can hear his calls and could come if they wanted to, but that they are choosing to ignore his cries for help.

By the end of three weeks of separation, I had come to many erroneous conclusions, including: “I’m on my own (the Ones I need are not here with me),” “It’s hopeless and I’m powerless – the Ones I need are not coming, and nothing I can do will make them come,” “There’s no possible justification for allowing this to happen to me – I can’t trust their hearts for me,” “they won’t help me when I’m overwhelmed and need their help,” and “this situation is overwhelming – it’s more than I can handle, and I might as well just give up and disconnect.” Along with these erroneous conclusions came a miserable morass of associated emotions – loneliness, rejection, hopelessness, powerlessness, feeling overwhelmed, and confusion. And I was also very angry that they had left me, that they were allowing me to suffer so intensely, and that they wouldn’t come when I called for them.

Possibly the most toxic effect of this experience is that I have often transferred these thoughts and feelings towards my parents onto the Lord. I used to think this phenomena – children transferring beliefs and emotions from traumatic memories onto the Lord – happened by some mysterious process, but just recently I realized that it’s actually straightforward. Any time a traumatic memory gets triggered, and our interaction with the Lord in the present, triggering situation parallels some part²⁵ of the original memory, then the Lord will be the target for the corresponding triggered beliefs and emotions.

²⁵ Note that the interaction with the Lord in the present sometimes matches the original memory in many ways, like with my situation in the example described here. However, an extensive and/or close

For example, any time I would become stuck in a situation that felt overwhelming, and call out to the Lord for help, but then not be able to perceive His presence or help, the beliefs and emotions from this 2 year old separation memory would be activated, with my interactions with the Lord in the present triggering situation paralleling my interactions with my parents in the original memory. Whenever this has happened, it has felt intensely true that I can't trust God's heart towards me because He chooses to allow things for which there is no possible justification, it has felt intensely true that He's not with me now, and won't come even though I call and call for Him, and it has felt intensely true that He won't help me when I'm overwhelmed by a situation and need His help.

For those of you who have heard our teaching on implicit memory, this is a good example of what it looks like when implicit memories are activated. The situation in the present triggered implicit memory beliefs and emotions, with the Lord as their target, but I had no awareness or insight regarding "oh, these thoughts and emotions are from traumatic childhood memories." Instead, it felt true, subjectively, that the thoughts and emotions were about the Lord, and that they were true in the present.

As I spent hours paging through the 1,000 page technical mechanics manual, hours looking through hundreds of on-line "help" documents, and many more hours trying to make sense out of the complex tangle of wires, fuses, relays, and circuit boards that had been hiding under the carpet and behind the dashboard of our car; and as I asked the Lord for help, but did not perceive dramatic intervention, the whole experience was enough to trigger many of the beliefs and emotions from my 2 y.o. separation trauma. As the 2 y.o. memories got stirred up, "It's hopeless and I'm powerless – there's nothing I can do to fix this problem," "this situation is overwhelming – it's more than I can handle, and I might as well just give up" felt true. It also felt, subjectively, intensely true that I couldn't trust God's heart towards me – that there was no possible justification for his choice to allow this horrible mess. It felt, subjectively, intensely true that God was not with me, that He wasn't coming, even though I was calling and calling, that He would never come, and that He wouldn't help me in this situation where I was overwhelmed and needed His help. And along with these thoughts (beliefs) from the 2 y.o. memory came the associated emotions – the miserable morass of loneliness, rejection, hopelessness, feeling overwhelmed, confusion, and bitterness.

In the past, when these beliefs and emotions have been stirred up to this intensity, I've always gotten stuck in the place of transferring the triggered thoughts and emotions onto the Lord. And all of these triggered thoughts and emotions, now transferred onto the Lord, would feel, subjectively, reasonable and justified. It may seem outrageous, but when I would get really triggered and really stuck in this place, I would challenge the Lord with something along the lines of:

“There's no possible justification for allowing _____ (fill in the blank) to happen, and especially no possible justification for not being with me or helping me when I'm in trouble and asking for help. The only possible explanation is that You're not trustworthy – You're an idiot, a jerk, or some combination of the two, and I certainly can't trust Your heart towards me. I dare You to explain Yourself. If You can't explain Yourself (and I doubt You can), then I demand that You admit You're wrong, apologize, make restitution, and promise that You'll never let this happen again.”

As many of you may also have discovered, tantrums, demands, and threats seem to have little power over the Lord (they may work with your grandmother, but they don't work very well with the Lord). As I describe below, on previous occasions when I had gotten triggered in this way, my distorted beliefs and angry choices had always blocked the way forward, and I would circle, miserably, in this stuck place.

C. New truths in my normal belief memory system open the way for breakthrough:

However, on this occasion things were different, and the difference had to do with these new Immanuel truths in my normal belief memory system. Even while blended with the triggered thoughts and emotions, including intense anger at the Lord, I was still able to hold onto these new Immanuel truths. The compelling clarity and undisputable scriptural foundation of Charlotte's Immanuel teaching, the observable emotional and spiritual potency of the Lord's Immanuel presence in therapy sessions, and the resonance in my own heart with the “Immanuel” words from the Lord – these combined sources of Immanuel truth directly opposed the anti-Immanuel and external locus of control beliefs and emotions, and helped me hold onto the possibility that there might be another explanation. I can clearly remember sitting in the car, surrounded by tools, repair manuals, wires, circuit boards, and spare parts, and thinking: “Maybe God isn't choosing to withhold His presence because He's a perverse tormentor – maybe there's something I am doing that's preventing me from perceiving His presence and receiving His help.”²⁶

²⁶ Until absorbing these Immanuel truths, my question to the Lord had actually always been “why aren't You with me,” as opposed to the more truth based “Why can't I perceive Your presence?” It seems like it's good to start with as much truth as possible, so now I always try to pray “Lord, I know You're with me here. Please help me to perceive Your presence,” instead of “Lord, please come and be with me here,” and I try to ask “Lord, why can't I perceive Your presence?,” instead of “Why aren't You with me?”

I could feel myself making a choice to turn away from my old, stuck place. On this occasion, I was able to choose a new response: “Lord, I’m tired of being stuck here. Even though the thoughts and emotions from my childhood memories still feel true, I know that there must be some explanation that I haven’t thought of. I’m ready for something different to happen here,” and then “Lord, please show me what’s in the way. I’m even willing to see if there’s something I’m doing that blocks me from perceiving Your presence and receiving Your help. Show me what I need to do differently to be able to perceive your presence and to be able to receive the help You have for me.” And this last prayer wasn’t just my adult mind praying, while ignoring continued bitterness and defiance in my child thoughts and emotions. I could feel internal unity regarding this prayer – I could feel agreement (grudging, but still agreement), even from my angry, hurting, 2 year old ego-state package.

In the past, I’d never been able to get past the two year old beliefs and bitterness that had been transferred onto the Lord. It felt so true that my pain was being caused by His failure to be with me – not my failure to perceive His presence; and it felt so true that it was His responsibility to fix the problem – not my responsibility to do something different. Note that these thoughts were accurate for me as a two year old with respect to my parents – my pain was caused by their failure to be with me, not my failure to perceive their presence, and it was their responsibility to fix the problem, not my responsibility to do something different – but these thoughts became lie-based beliefs when I transferred them onto the Lord.

These trauma-associated beliefs that I had misplaced onto the Lord, combined with the anger and bitterness from the triggered memories, had always blocked me from really submitting to the possibility that I was doing something that was preventing the Lord from helping me.

As soon as I turned away from my stuck, angry place, and gave the Lord permission to show me any way in which I was blocking His presence and help from reaching me, an insight came to me. I had an awareness, and a brief image, of myself in the 2 year old memory. The Lord showed me that He was there with me, wanting to help me, but I was holding out for the only answer I was willing to consider. Jesus was there, offering comfort and help: “Karl, your parents don’t understand, and they’re not going to come for a long time; but I’m here, and I can help you.” But in my hurt and anger, I was responding with “If you don’t have my mother with you, then I don’t want to talk to you.” Instead of accepting the painful truth, and allowing Him to be with me and help me, I was still stuck in the place of demanding that reality be different. I didn’t want to accept the Lord’s answer and offer – I wanted Him to make it different: “No, I refuse to accept that my parents aren’t coming! Make it different! I want You to make them come now. I’m not interested in any other plan, including accepting the painful truth, and allowing You to be with me and help me.”

Another way to put it, is that in order to remain focused on my mother’s immediate presence as the only acceptable solution, I had to turn away from the Lord. In order to perceive the Lord’s presence and receive His comfort, I would have to turn my focus away from demanding my mother and turn towards the Lord.

At this point, I made the choices that He had been waiting for for 42 years. I chose to release my previous choice/vow “I will not accept any solution other than ‘here’s your mother,’” I chose to accept the painful truth, I chose to release and turn away from my demand that reality be different, and I chose to turn towards the Lord – to focus on Him, to allow Him to be with me, and to receive His comfort. As soon as I did this, I was able to perceive the Lord’s presence with me, in the memory and in the present, even as I was sitting in the overwhelming mess of the car. And this was BEFORE anything had worked out with respect to actually fixing the car.

This was something new for me. I was sitting there, feeling frustrated, over my head, and deeply disappointed in the natural, but not feeling triggered, hopeless, discouraged, overwhelmed, bitter, or alienated from the Lord. In fact, what felt true was “I don’t understand why You’re allowing this mess, and it’s really hard, but I know that You’re with me, and because of who You are, that’s enough.”

Another encouraging aspect of this whole story has to do with interactions between Charlotte and I. During previous episodes of being intensely triggered and getting tangled in the components of this pernicious blockage, I had often dumped my misery on Charlotte. As described in the example presented earlier, I would become increasingly unpleasant, argue with her about why my triggered thoughts and emotions were valid, expect her to do something to help me feel better, and then get angry at her and judge her if she didn’t help me feel better. And I would defend all of this as reasonable behavior.

Our experience with this whole car scenario was different. As I was intensely triggered, and tangled in the components of my pernicious blockage, I could feel the temptation to revert to my old, toxic patterns of behavior; but I could also feel the influence of the truth in my normal belief memory system. I could feel truth about implicit memory phenomena helping me to recognize and own my tangle of triggered thoughts and emotions, and I could feel the new Immanuel truth especially helping to expose the anti-Immanuel beliefs and emotions for the triggered, implicit memory content that they were. I could feel the truth in my normal belief memory system helping me choose righteous behavior with respect to Charlotte.

I was still miserably triggered and tangled in my pernicious blockage, but instead of dumping this mess on Charlotte, I was able to own my triggered thoughts and emotions, and to ask her for help in ways that were appropriate. She was very supportive and encouraging through the whole ordeal, and this helped me persist in wrestling with the car, and also helped me persist in turning to the Lord for help with my pernicious blockage tangle. It was inherently right and good for me to choose this new behavior, but I am guessing that the absence of inappropriate, toxic behavior from me made it easier for her to be supportive and encouraging, as opposed to triggered and adversarial.

D. Summary regarding my experience as an example of an especially pernicious blockage: For those of you watching the video, if you want to engage more actively with the material, you can stop the tape here and take a little “self-test” – see if you can outline how the components of my experience fit into the framework of the especially pernicious blockage I discussed earlier.

For those of you who took the “self test,” here are the “answers at the back of the book”:

First component – motivation: The first component of my especially pernicious blockage was my desire to avoid the painful truth.

Second component – choices/vows that directly block perceiving and/or receiving

Immanuel: The second component of my especially pernicious blockage was choosing to demand that reality be different, and to focus on the immediate arrival of my parents as the only solution, instead of choosing to accept the painful truth, turn to the Lord, focus on Him, and receive His help.

Specific “anti-Immanuel” beliefs and emotions (special ingredient #1): This is one of the “special ingredients” that I especially want you to remember from my earlier discussion. The specific “anti-Immanuel” beliefs and emotions that were transferred onto the Lord – the beliefs and emotions that directly opposed Immanuel truth – were “He’s not here,” “He won’t come,” and “I can’t trust His heart towards me,” and the associated emotions of hopelessness, fear, and anger. These “anti-Immanuel” beliefs and emotions were certainly hindering me from exposing and dealing with my wrong choices, because instead of feeling hopeful, thinking “I know the Lord is with me, but I can’t perceive Him, so there must be something in the way,” and asking for His help to expose and resolve the blockage; I was believing these anti-Immanuel lies, loosing much of my emotional energy to discouragement and anxiety, and focusing the rest of my energy and attention on being angry at the Lord for not being with me and not taking care of me.

External locus of control beliefs, emotions, and choices (Special ingredient #2): This is the second “special ingredient” that I especially want you to remember from my earlier discussion, and it’s the pernicious blockage component that’s most often missed.

I’m sure many of you were able to spot this second “special ingredient” in my experience – the specific package of beliefs, emotions, and choices that are appropriate for a young child, but that become a sneaky, immobilizing trap when we bring them forward into our adult lives and transfer them onto the Lord:

the beliefs “it’s the Lord’s fault that I’m in pain, it’s His responsibility to fix the problem, and it’s reasonable for me to simply wait for Him to do something;”

the associated emotions of powerlessness and anger;

and the associated choices to “wait for Him to do something” (instead of actively turning to Him and asking for help).

This “second special ingredient” package of beliefs, emotions, and choices was certainly hindering me from exposing and dealing with my wrong choices, and my misplaced anti-Immanuel beliefs and emotions. Believing “it’s the Lord’s fault that I’m in pain, it’s His responsibility to fix the problem, and it’s reasonable for me to simply wait for Him to do something;” feeling powerless and angry; and choosing to “wait for Him to do His job” are inherently incompatible with submitting to the possibility that my wrong choices and my distorted beliefs are the real problem.

There are a lot of false dichotomies we can fall into, but this is a true dichotomy – you have to choose either one or the other. You cannot have external locus of control beliefs and emotions AND truly submit to the possibility that your wrong choices and your distorted beliefs are the real problem.

When I was believing “it’s the Lord’s fault that I’m in pain, it’s His responsibility to fix the problem, and it’s reasonable for me to simply wait for Him to do something;” feeling powerless and angry; and choosing to wait sullenly for the Lord to do His job:

I was not able to think: “I know the Lord is good and that He’s with me, but this doesn’t feel true, so I must be misplacing beliefs and emotions from somewhere else onto the Lord,” or able to think “I know the Lord is here, with me, but I can’t perceive His presence, so I must be making choices that are blocking me from perceiving Him;”

I was not able to pray: “Lord, please show me any choices I am making that are preventing me from perceiving Your presence and receiving Your help, please show me any misplaced beliefs that I am transferring onto You;”

I was not able to receive His guidance;

I was not able to revoke the choices that blocked my ability to perceive and receive His Immanuel presence; and I was not able to receive His truth in the traumatic memories where my distorted beliefs and emotions were carried.

Component #5: Anger and bitterness transferred onto the Lord as the final “hardener of the heart” was also certainly present in my experience.

E. Summary of my experience as an example of the role of normal belief memory system truth in exposing and resolving pernicious blockages: As described throughout the above narrative, it is clear that the meditating I had been doing on these Immanuel truths played an important role in exposing and neutralizing this pernicious tangle of beliefs, emotions, and choices that had hindered my ability to perceive the Lord’s presence and to receive His help. Truth in my normal belief memory system – truth from good teaching, and truth from observing and hearing what the Lord said and did in other’s sessions – helped to expose the beliefs and emotions that I had transferred onto the Lord. These Immanuel truths were so compelling that when they came into conflict with the beliefs and emotions from my childhood memories, they were able to expose the distorted beliefs and emotions for what they were, even as the distorted beliefs and emotions were doing the classic implicit memory thing of feeling, subjectively intensely true in the present. The strength of these Immanuel truths helped me choose to submit the triggered, distorted beliefs and emotions from my traumatic childhood memories to what I know is true in my normal belief memory system. The strength of the Immanuel truth in my normal belief memory system helped my whole mind choose a place of humility and submission in a new way, and this humility and submission made it possible for me to release the bitterness, ask for help, receive guidance, and then revoke the choices that had been preventing me from perceiving and receiving the Lord’s Immanuel presence.

Note that choosing to submit the beliefs and emotions from my traumatic childhood memories to the truth in my normal belief memory system was not what permanently resolved the distorted beliefs associated with my unresolved traumatic memories. Choosing to submit my distorted, trauma associated beliefs to the Immanuel truths in my normal belief memory system made it possible for me to release the bitterness, ask for help, receive guidance, and revoke the choices/vows that had been blocking me from perceiving His Immanuel presence. This then made it possible for me to perceive His presence and to receive His comfort from the inside of the two year old memories. And perceiving His presence and receiving His comfort from the inside of the two year old memories then permanently resolved the distorted trauma-associated beliefs by replacing them with truth. For example, replacing “The Lord is not with me, and He won’t come even when I call,” with “He is with me, and He has always been with me;” and replacing “There’s no explanation for this, and I can’t trust His heart for me,” with “He has been here with help for me, but my own choices and bitterness were blocking the way. I can trust His heart for me.”

Note also that we're not talking about using good teaching to reinforce denial. For example, I did not say: "This is what the Bible says is true, so I will just choose to believe," and then ignore my trauma-associated beliefs and emotions to the contrary. As just described, it was important for me to choose to hold onto the truth in my normal belief memory system, even when it didn't feel true, AND it was also important to acknowledge my triggered childhood memory beliefs and emotions, to recognize them for what they were, and then to cooperate with the Lord in working to resolve the traumatic memories.

When I was in the furnace of a really difficult situation, where distorted beliefs and emotions from childhood memories felt true, having a truth anchor that was strong enough to hold helped me recognize the trauma-associated beliefs and emotions for what they were, and helped me choose to cooperate with the Lord's healing work.

Furthermore, when I was in the furnace of a really difficult situation, where distorted beliefs and emotions from childhood memories felt true, having a truth anchor that was strong enough to hold helped me recognize my triggered, trauma-associated beliefs and emotions for what they were, and helped me choose righteous behavior in my relationship with Charlotte. As describe above, in addition to being good and right, this made it easier for Charlotte to help me as I struggled with my intense triggering and with my pernicious blockage.

And here's the end of the story, and the really good news: when the old wounds are resolved, so that there are no distorted, trauma-associated beliefs and emotions opposing the truth, then the truth feels true, even in the furnace. It was good to be able to hold onto the truth, choose righteous behavior, and choose to cooperate with the Lord's healing work even when I was miserably triggered in the middle of the car situation. And it was also good to have an initial, spontaneous response of: "Wow. This is really a bad situation. But I know You're with me, Lord, and because of who You are, that's enough. I trust Your heart towards me, and feel safe in Your care, even in this furnace. Lord, show me how to cooperate with Your plan in this painful mess."

IV. Summary/Conclusions: We have been amazed and blessed by the healing power of Immanuel – the Lord's living presence, with us – and we have been sobered by the number of people we have worked with who have been stuck for decades with respect to certain important healing targets because of pernicious blockages that have prevented them from perceiving and receiving Immanuel. Being more aware of this kind of hindrance should help people to expose it, and compelling normal belief system truth about the presence and character of the Lord should help both to expose and to neutralize these blockages. The implicit memory material we're developing should also provide normal belief system truth that will be helpful in both exposing and neutralizing pernicious blockages. Our hope is that these tools will be used to remove these hindrances that prevent so many from perceiving and receiving Immanuel – God with us.
